Rays of Hope

Letter from the Editor

The sun reminds me of my higher power; powerful, always there, and follows me relentlessly. Dark clouds and night sky may make it feel like hope is nowhere in sight sometimes. As long as I am willing to open the morning curtains of my heart, the warm rays of hope and recovery can shine through.

Who I Really Am
A Personal Share

Before I found OA, I tried everything to stop bingeing and I mean everything. I went to psychologists and psychiatrists, I tried medication, hypnosis, acupuncture, I tried only eating certain foods, only bingeing every other day, bingeing but not purging. For close to eight years, I attempted to recover in the "standard" eating disorder model of becoming a "normal eater." This is what the eating disorder specialists and treatments preached. I tried with every ounce of my being to be a normal eater, to have no "bad foods" and eat all kinds of foods without prejudice. To occasionally indulge, like "normal people." But I never felt normal. I even told my ED specialist psychologist that I felt like an addict. He told me bulimia was not an addiction. Thankfully, I eventually found OA. More thankfully, I found it before I'd given up. OA told me I was an addict, that I was not a normal eater and that I never would be. This was so freeing for me to hear. Finally I didn't have to pretend anymore. I didn't have try to be a normal eater. I could abstain from the foods and behaviors that made me crazy. I didn't have to "overcome" them and learn to east them and be okay. I found a stability and peace with my food for the first time in my life. OA showed me how to live as the eater that I am, not by someone else's standard. OA gave me sanity and allowed me to embrace who I really am. I am forever grateful"

A Girl Who Learned To Give

I had an overwhelming sense of lack in my life before working the OA program. There was never enough food, money, time, or love. I don't even remember the 7th tradition prompt my first year of meetings. I didn't care to be honest. I was here to somehow survive this pain, and technically the meetings were free. I never to rarely contributed to 7th tradition. I was raw from a place of nothingness. I never carried cash with me so I could easily say to myself it was more about, "ooops. I don't have any cash on me today" except it happened 90% of the time. I needed the meetings so badly and had so many feelings of never having enough money. I thought 7th tradition was for people who had money. I thought certainly "God understands". A year or so went by of healing, working the steps, and watching members so graciously place cash in the basket as it went around. Gradually as I healed, there was a place inside me I never met. I finally felt, through the grace of this program, that I was no longer helpless. I had tools, resources, and all of a sudden one day I became grateful for that. I subconsciously began tucking a dollar, then two, then 5's away in my purse. I wanted to offer appreciation to a program that saved my life. All of a sudden I felt strong donating instead of fearful. I always thought since I was a little girl that giving and contributing was for rich people. I guess in a way I was right. What I didn't know was that rich comes in so many other forms than money. I am rich in recovery, healing, and choices and since I am now rich because of OA I offer in grateful grace a 7th tradition. Not out of obligation or fear but because my heart has finally been nourished enough to give. Two years into my recovery I started attending intergroup and found a new place to give from. I saw how contributions actually work to create workshops, literature, and places for people like me to heal and gather with other OA members. I never thought me, always financially strapped, could feel rich by giving. I heard people say it all the time but I always felt it was for "those" people and I certainly never thought it was going to be a part of my healing and recovery. My higher power gently taught me through the 7th tradition that I am rich and I have A LOT to give. Thank you OA for teaching me how to give. It truly only takes willingness to give.

You Know You're Abstinent When...

With half of my family from a very small town in Kentucky, there has been more than one occasion where Jeff Foxworthy's "You Might Be a Redneck If..." jokes have been shared at family events – no matter how many times I rolled my eyes in protest. Recently, during one of my daily conversations with my sponsor – the kind that you think will be simple, but turns out to be amazing – I shared about a mini vacation from which my husband, son, and I had just returned. I made the comment that "You know you're abstinent when.....after vacation, you immediately unpack your bags and do your laundry." I shared this comment because so often, when in the food, I would come home from a vacation completely full of sugar and regret. Bags would be unpacked weeks "later", and laundry would be done "as soon as I feel better." I went on to share that I often think of filling in the blank of "You Know You're Abstinent When..." Almost immediately, my sponsor suggested I complete some of those blanks and share with our Newsletter. Since one blank could now read "You Know You're Abstinent When you are up for a new challenge," I decided to take pen to paper – or in this case, finger to keyboard!

- You know you're abstinent when you no longer get bagged meals through a window.
- You know you're abstinent when you consider trying something as weird looking as quinoa. You REALLY know you're abstinent if you actually like it!
- When you realize there is more than one color of apple, and that "berry" is not just a flavor of candy...you might be abstinent.
- If you feel stuff – A LOT – you very well could be abstinent.
- You know you're abstinent when you've named your disease. Mine is named Hopper.
- When your trash can is a one way entry (things go in, not OUT), you could be abstinent.
- If your family and friends now know that you will NOT share your meals – they're weighed and measured and you want it ALL – then you just might be abstinent.
- You know you're abstinent when you "splurge" on Butter Lettuce.
- When you make a "To Do" list and actually DO it, you might be abstinent.
- In the event you find yourself envying other people's Tupperware and/or lunch bags, there is a good chance that you are abstinent.
- If you brush your teeth at night (because you actually stop eating before you fall asleep), you could possibly be abstinent.
- You know you're abstinent when you say things like "I just love my measuring cups."
- If you break out a scale at a restaurant, you might be abstinent.
- You might be abstinent if you no longer get angry at new binge food inventions.
- There's a chance you are abstinent if you: have a new passion for life; you are present in each moment; you say "sorry" and mean it; you ask "how are you" and care; you are grateful; you have dates with friends, not food; and you are open to growth and change.

How do you know when you are abstinent? How would YOU fill in the blank? ~ Anonymous
