Reflections

I can't remember a time in my life when food was not a major focus. Although I had a generally happy childhood, I received a lot of mixed messages: my mother was on a perpetual diet and my father took physical fitness to extremes. I came to believe that physical appearance and social acceptance were crucial for success, and that food was the best way to soothe emotional distress. The messages stuck; I found solace in food as my parents' marriage fell apart or when I was harassed by others. As a result, I became so wrapped up in compulsive eating behaviors that I felt disengaged from life. No matter how hard I tried, I couldn't wrestle myself from the grip food had on me. I felt utterly hopeless. My solution was to restrict; instead of food, I used exercise as a means to control how others viewed me. But without food as a crutch, I had no idea how to cope with life. And no way to foresee how devastating this path would become.

This was compounded by the fact that there seems to be a stigma attached when man struggles with food. This observation perpetuated my negative self-talk and the belief that there was something inherently broken inside of me. I have spent nearly 20 years in and out of treatment, trying in vain to grasp recovery. Nothing helped — all I knew was shame.

That changed when I discovered the rooms of Overeaters Anonymous. There I found people who were able to love me while I was incapable of loving myself — people who would encourage me and remind me of the good within me. I found friends who heard my stories and responded, "Yeah, Me too." And I that's what I needed; a safe place to learn how to be myself and how to connect with something greater than myself. While I certainly haven't reconciled all of the hurt from my past, for the first time I have hope that something different is possible. I've found a home and a place of rest in the rooms of OA. And for that I am eternally grateful.

Happy Holidays Happy Abstinence

Thoughts from the Food Court

Are you having trouble with the overabundance of holiday foods?

As the holidays roll on, I remember hearing from another OA member: "My food is the food I eat— that is, the items on my food plan are the things I must eat to maintain abstinence." Then, I remember that even though others can eat without repercussions, I cannot. Sometimes it takes only one bite to trigger a physical craving that wants me to break abstinence. So I remind myself, "I have a food plan, and for my own well-being, I must follow that plan."

Thoughts to Remember:

1. Did I plan my food today?
2. Have I been abstinent today?
3. Is my action plan firmly in place?
4. Did I pray and meditate today?
5. Did I call, text, or ask for help today?
6. Is my action plan up to date?
7. Did I use my action plan?
8. How (or did) I use help from my HP?

Favorite Things

Sunday Night Meeting: 7:00
Bayshore Presbyterian Church

This meeting feels like a comforting hug that helps me reflect on my week. It is one of the things I get to do on Sundays to get my daily spiritual medicine and rest.

Wednesday Night Meeting
Turning Point of Tampa (TPOT)
6227 Sheldon Rd.

This meeting is a safe place where I am 100% comfort-able sharing about all the ridiculously hard times I've had accepting my OA program. Then the following week I get to share the amazing moments when I can sit back and recognize that for this day my sanity has been restored. The experience, strength and hope has been amazing and unmatched!
